EXPLANATORY NOTES

INTRODUCTION

This volume presents the deaths and death rates in a number of geographical sub-divisions and local areas of England and Wales during the period 1959-63, distinguishing the principal causes of death, and relating figures to the populations as enumerated at the 1961 Census. It is one of a series of decennial area mortality analyses which cover periods from 1851-60 onwards, the purpose of which is to examine the geographical patterns and variations in these statistics more closely than is possible in the annual data published in the Registrar General's Statistical Reviews. On this occasion, comment on the figures presented here will be provided in a separate volume of the Supplement on Area Mortality. (Variations in the numbers and causes of deaths between the different social and occupational groups of the population are examined separately in another series of decennial supplement volumes.)

In the interests of continuity, the tabulations in this volume have been prepared so far as possible in a form comparable with those in the preceding volume (relating to the period 1950-53). But in Tables 1A and 1B hospital regions have been added to the geographical sub-divisions.

A computer has been used in the production of these tables, apart from a limited amount of clerical compilation for Table 2, and the method of reproduction has been by photo-lithographic processing from the output of the computer system.

Tables 1A and 1B give, for each sex, the deaths and death rates by age from all causes and from a number of selected causes, in standard and hospital regions, conurbations, urban and rural aggregates, metropolitan boroughs, county boroughs, and administrative counties, the last being divided, for all causes only, into urban areas and rural districts. Table 2 gives stillbirths, neonatal and infant mortality rates, distinguishing seven causes of infant deaths, for the same areas and sub-divisions as in Tables 1A and 1B with the exception of hospital regions.

Urban and rural aggregates

These aggregates comprise (a) the six conurbations combined, (b) the aggregates of urban local authority areas outside the conurbations in three groups according to the size of their resident population as estimated at Census day (23rd April, 1961), and (c) the aggregate of rural local authority areas outside the conurbations. Urban areas include boroughs and urban districts as defined by the Local Government Acts, and rural areas are rural districts as similarly defined.

Hospital regions

The hospital regions presented in this volume consist of aggregations of entire local authority areas. They are identical with the areas of regional hospital boards except where the boundaries of the latter divide local authority areas. Any such divided local authority area is allocated to the hospital region containing the greater proportion of the population.

Populations

The rates in Table 1 (except at ages under 1 year) are calculated on the basis of the enumerated populations of the local areas, as determined at the 1961 Census. The populations include those residents of the area who were at home but not those who were away on census night. They exclude members of the Armed Forces and Mercantile Marine who were outside England and Wales, but include visitors from other areas in the United Kingdom and from abroad, and members of the Armed Forces of Commonwealth or foreign countries except those aboard foreign naval vessels.

People enumerated aboard vessels which on census night were at moorings or anchorage in England and Wales or were engaged in coastwise or fishing voyages have been included. They have been classified, with as much accuracy as the information furnished allows, to the appropriate local area of the anchorage or mooring of the vessel. If actually in transit on census night they have been classified to their next port or place of call. People who were travelling during the night or who were otherwise inaccessible at mid-night of census day and who had not been previously enumerated were counted as part of the population of the area where they arrived next day.

Deaths

The deaths recorded in this volume are those registered in England and Wales, and include both civilians and non-civilians. They have been assigned to the area of usual residence of the deceased if this was in England and Wales, and otherwise to the area of occurrence. Accommodation provided under Parts III and IV of the National Assistance Act, 1948, has been regarded as the place of residence of persons dying there. Deaths occurring in chronic sick and psychiatric hospitals have been assigned to the area of occurrence if the deceased had been there six months or more. If the deceased had been there less than six months the death has been transferred to the area of previous usual residence.

It should be noted that while deaths have been assigned so far as possible to the area of usual residence of the deceased, populations are those enumerated in each area (see "Populations" above).

Causes of death

The classification of causes of death is that prescribed in the *International Statistical Classification of Diseases, Injuries and Causes of Death, 1955 (Seventh Revision) which operated from the year 1958 in accordance with international agreement. The causes distinguished in the tables have been selected from the Abridged List and the Supplementary Abridged List used by the Registrar General for the tabulation of deaths in local areas of England and Wales (Table 21 in the annual Statistical Review).

In Table 1 two series of causes of death are given:

Death rates and ratios

In Table 1, the death rates at all ages and at separate ages, except under one year, have been calculated as mean annual deaths in 1959-63 per million persons of corresponding sex and age enumerated at the 1961 Census. At ages under 1 year, the rates have been calculated as deaths in 1959-63 per million live births during the same period.

The Standardised Mortality Ratios (SMR's) shown in Table 1 express the actual number of deaths at all ages in each geographical area as a percentage of the "expected" number of deaths, viz. the number that would have occurred in the area if the death rate for each sex/age group had been the same as that of England and Wales. The SMR therefore provides a more meaningful comparison of the mortality in each area with that of the country as a whole because it removes the effects of local variations in the proportional sex/age structure of the population by a process of indirect standardisation. The age groups used for this calculation are:- (under 1), (1-4), (5-14), (15-24), (25-34), (35-44), (45-54), (55-64), (65-74), and (75+).

In the section of Table 1 dealing with deaths from maternal causes, a restricted number of age groups have been shown, and in addition to death rates based on population the table also presents rates per thousand total births for this cause.

In Table 2, stillbirth rates are expressed per thousand total live and still births and infant and neonatal mortality rates are expressed per thousand live births.

Birth denominators in all these rates relate to numbers occurring during the period 1959-63.

Statistical significance

Many of the rates given in the two tables are based on small numbers of deaths and are thus liable to considerable error due to chance fluctuations. In all instances, the number of deaths as well as the rate is shown in the two tables. As a rough guide to significance it may be assumed that the standard error of a given number of deaths is approximately equal to the square root of that number; that the standard error of a rate or SMR is approximately equal to the rate or SMR divided by the square root of the number of deaths involved. A local rate or SMR may be assumed to be significantly different (at the 5 per cent level) from the corresponding national rate or SMR when the difference between local and national rates or SMR's is more than twice the standard error of the local rate or SMR.

Regional and Social Factors in Infant Mortality

by
C. C. Spicer, M.R.C.S., L.R.C.P., Dip. Bact., Dip.S.S.
L. Lipworth, M.B., Ch.B., B.Sc.

This study gives the results of a special investigation carried out by the General Register Office into the pattern of over 14,000 stillbirths and over 17,000 infant deaths registered in England and Wales in the twelve months April 1964 to March 1965.

The factors studied in the investigation were social class of father, parity and age of mother, and the geographical region to which the birth was assigned. The detailed tables, which it is hoped will be of value to research workers who may wish to make a further study of the subject, are prefaced by a short commentary which draws attention to the more significant findings and describes the methods adopted in the enquiry—in particular, those adopted for the statistical analysis of the data.
