Dear Madam

I shall be delighted to receive the pupil at Clavier Hall, Hanover Square, next Wednesday morning for the rest of the term.

If she can come here for the preliminary interview I like to have with each pupil to see their special needs, and best method for their study, so far as it can be individual, it would be of great advantage. I could see her any time next Monday or Tuesday if I can have a post card fixing the time.

If there is not time to arrange this will you ask her to be at Clavier Hall quite punctually by 10.15 a.m. on Wednesday as the breathing, and voice-production exercises, start the Elocution lessons, and they will probably be of the most importance to her. Would she also bring a note book or ~~po~~ copy book and pencil to take down any notes she wishes as to voice production; and though I usually lend all books as I have not yet received the Cassell's copies of "Julius Caesar" ordered for this term, yet I shall be much obliged if she will bring any edition of ^{"Julius Caesar"} ~~it~~ - except the acting one - or any small complete volume of Shakespeare's plays, ~~in it~~ with "Julius Caesar" in it for her own use next Wednesday. Something modern and colloquial, and Behner's voice exercise book I will lend, and can look out for next time for some book of speeches by great orators, or good speakers, of a non-controversial nature if possible, in case I have any anti-suffrage pupils: of course I wish it to be perfectly open that she is an Honorary pupil for Suffrage purposes, because I wish to help such; though I must not propagandize at the classes themselves. I shall give her announcements, etc, to make such as I have had to make, ^{of various things} ~~of~~ Hon. Sec. at Public Meetings, which it was of importance should be distinctly heard at a considerable distance, amongst other individual things. To be able to give out clear directions in a penic I like all my pupils to let me teach them.

Yours truly
Margaret Davies Webster
