My dearully

I was awfully disappointed at having to give up meeting you again, but I discovered in the course of this night that my return-ticket would expire on the 30th instead of the 31st of the month, and I had to change my plans accordingly.
I was naturally very much put out and had to give up several other things, among which a call on Mrs. Russell Moulton. I just managed a few shoppings and a call on Miss Morrison this afternoon.

I am sorry you had bad weather in Germany. I enjoyed my visit to Cambridge extremely, and no less - though in quite a different way - look to Miss Parker and the Papers! On the whole my visit to England has been delightful - I feel much fresher in mind for it and certainly stronger in body too than when I came.

Did you read the article on 'the marriage a failure' in the Westminster review? It is said to be very interesting and I shall try to get it at the station to-night. But I hope you will read it too and give me your opinion about it.

I must be off in a short time, so good-bye my dear friend, and an revoir at Paris!
I shall not be able to write from here very soon, as heaps of business await me.

Yours very affably
Alfred Colton,
