Dear Miss Ross Clyne,

In answer to your letter, my impressions of the reasons for the scarcity of women in Parliament so far, are mainly that there has been little time for them to prepare themselves for it and look upon it as a possibility; and secondly, I think that a great many women who are keenly interested in some particular cause or another, especially that of peace, are not party-minded and do not see their way to further their cause better by seeking to be in Parliament than by working for it outside but, doubtless, these are only two of many reasons.

Yours sincerely,

A. Ruth Fry.
