GAZETTEER FORTHE REORGANISED STATISTICAL REGIONS AND LOCAL AUTHORITIES IN THE UNITED KINGDOM

INTRODUCTION

Within the United Kingdom, the local government structure of Great Britain is currently undergoing significant change as a result of a programme of local government reorganisation. Changes have also been made to the areas for which regional statistics are produced.

It is recognised that the extent of change may cause confusion in attempting to compare the old and new geographies.

This Gazetteer has been prepared to help overcome this possible confusion. In particular, it is designed to assist in distinguishing those areas in England with unitary authority status from those retaining two-tier local government. The Gazetteer also identifies those local authorities in England that have pseudo unitary authorities status ie. the London boroughs and the metropolitan districts.

EXTENT OF GEOGRAPHICAL CHANGE

Changes to the structure of local government

The impact of the change varies within each of the United Kingdom's constituent countries.

England

In England the traditional two-tier local government structure is being partially replaced by a phased introduction of single-tier unitary authorities. These changes started with the creation of the Isle of Wight unitary authority in April 1995 and will be completed in April 1998 when 19 unitary authorities will be created. Forty six unitary authorities are being created in England in total.

Wales

In Wales the complete two-tier local government structure was replaced by 22 unitary authorities in April 1996.

Scotland

Similarly, in Scotland the complete two-tier local government structure was replaced by 32 single-tier council areas in April 1996.

Northern Ireland

In Northern Ireland local government was reorganised in October 1973 when the two-tier structure was replaced by single-tier District Council areas. There are no further known changes to the structure of local government in Northern Ireland.

Changes to the statistical regions

In addition to the changes to local government, the primary classification for the presentation of regional statistics in England has changed from the Standard Statistical Regions to Government Office Regions. The boundaries and constitutions of some regions changed as a consequence. The introduction of Government Office Regions increased the number of statistical regions in England from 8 to 9, although for administrative purposes there are 10. (Merseyside has its own Government Office, but it has not been adopted as a region in its own right for statistical purposes because of the difficulties associated with obtaining the full range of data for a relatively small area. Wherever possible, however, figures for the two components of the North West and Merseyside Region will be made available.

CREATION OF A UNITED KINGDOM GAZETTEER

Although the current geographical changes are limited to Great Britain, the Gazetteer includes all the constituent local government areas in the United Kingdom for completeness.

The Gazetteer has been built from the local government districts existing prior to local government reorganisation and these areas are referred to as the basic 'building blocks'. Most building blocks are able to be aggregated to the reorganised local government structure and to the higher level geographies existing prior to local government reorganisation. In a few instances the building blocks have been split by the implementation of local government reorganisation.

The building blocks are also able to be aggregated to both the old and new regional structures and to the higher levels of the European NUTS area classification existing at the end of 1996. (Further information about the NUTS area classification is provided on page 17.)

GAZETTEER CONTENT

The Gazetteer comprises separate sections for each of the four constituent United Kingdom countries and, within each section, the building blocks are listed alphabetically to facilitate easy searching on familiar names (see column E).

The Gazetteer contains nine columns (A-I) which are fully described below:

Column A

For areas in England, the Government Office Region is shown. For areas in the three countries forming the rest of the United Kingdom, the appropriate country name is given.

Column B

Similarly, for areas in England, the Standard Statistical Region is shown and in the rest of the United Kingdom the appropriate country name is repeated. The Standard Statistical Region also relates to the European NUTS 1 area classification existing at the end of 1996.

Column C

For areas in England, Wales and Scotland, the sub-regional NUTS 2 area name is given. The area names are those existing prior to local government reorganisation. In the Northern Ireland section, the country name is repeated.

Column D

For areas in England, this column includes the former Greater London Council area and metropolitan county council areas that existed prior to their abolition or the (shire) county in which the building blocks were located prior to local government reorganisation. For areas in Scotland, the Regions in which the building blocks were located prior to local government reorganisation are given. For each building block in Northern Ireland, the country name is repeated. The areal levels shown in this column also form the NUTS 3 level area classification.

Column E

For all areas in the United Kingdom affected by local government reorganisation (parts of England and all of Wales and Scotland), the local authority districts existing prior to local government reorganisation are shown. In the remaining areas of the United Kingdom (parts of England and all of Northern Ireland) the unchanged local authority district names are shown. The areal levels shown in this column also form the NUTS 4 level area classification.

Column F

An indicator ($\sqrt{}$) is included to show the districts in Great Britain whose status has changed from a two-tier authority to a single-tier authority through local government reorganisation. (NB. In England, local government reorganisation is being introduced over a four year period - 1 April 1995 to 1 April 1998.)

Column G

For all areas in Great Britain, the counties and unitary authorities/council areas existing after local government reorganisation are shown. The single-tier District Council areas in Northern Ireland are also shown. (NB. London boroughs and metropolitan districts are included as pseudo unitary authorities rather than as forming part of a two-tier structure.)

Column H

The current local government structure existing for each area within the United Kingdom is shown.

Column I

The operational date for the introduction of each new authority created within Great Britain as a result of local government reorganisation is shown.

NUTS CLASSIFICATION: AREAL LEVELS

NUTS (Nomenclature of Territorial Units for Statistics) is a hierarchical classification of spatial units which is intended to provide a single, uniform breakdown of areas for producing comparative regional statistics across the European Union.

In the United Kingdom the five-tier NUTS structure comprises existing national administrative areas for the most part but the constituent areas are currently being reviewed as a consequence of the introduction of Government Office Regions and unitary authorities/council areas.

The NUTS structure being proposed for adoption in the United Kingdom is shown below with the existing structure for comparison.

		EXISTING STRUCTURE
NUTS Level	Type of area					Type of area

ENHANCED VERSION OF THE GAZETTEER

An enhanced version of the Gazetteer is being produced which contains more detailed information about the impact of the changes to the statistical regions and the reorganised local authorities. The enhanced version will contain maps showing those areas affected by local government reorganisation and detailed constitutions of those reorganised local authorities that comprise parts of former local authorities. The enhanced gazetteer, which will be priced, is expected to be available in early autumn.
