Murdered Poet
CERNUDA, slight, charming, looking, with his small moustache, like a very gentle army officer, was a contemporary and friend of the murdered Garcia Lorca (whose play, "The Marriage of Blood," will be done by the English Stage Society in May).
 He described to me that moving occasion in Valencia last July, when friends and pupils of Garcia Lorca performed Lorca's play, "Mariana Pineda," with himself, Cernuda, in the chief part.
 Proper translations of these poets into English are long overdue.

It was in a terrific hurry at the Tobacco Stall at Girona Station last January, while I was anxious not to miss the Troop Train back to Port Bou.

I'll find out more about her. I think I heard that poor Lorca the poet killed last autumn, had a play about her & that she was killed at Granada. But I'm v. vague. R.L.S.
