Dear Miss Strachey,

Will this do? I am not quite sure whether I was to write as from myself or from the Society, so it seemed safest to take my impertinences upon my own shoulders. If you think that something should rather come from the Society, and that this is not too flippant, pray use it, but I should rather like it in that case if you would let Mrs Fawcett see it first. I could not help jeering; the thing really is too silly. How it must annoy poor Lady Knightley whose heart has been set so long upon bringing the P.L. to a reasonable position on this point.

Yours very truly

I would have typed more copies, but my machine has something wrong and won't duplicate; I am taking it down to be put right as soon as I can spare a morning.
