Mrs. WINTRINGHAM, M.P.

THE SECOND WOMAN IN THE BRITISH HOUSE OF COMMONS.

N Great Britain reforms move slowly—slowest of all, the equality reforms for women. We are still without equal Suffrage, and the last Parliamentary Session witnessed the defeat of several important Bills when they seemed within an ace of success. Still we move, and every woman's reform has without doubt received a big impetus by the return to Parliament of Mrs. Wintringham. British women are as happy in the second woman M.P. who will take her seat at Westminster as they are in their first. The whole civilized world knows what a valiant fighter for women Lady Astor is. How often in the midst of her overwhelmingly heavy work she has cried ""Send more women into the House to help me." Well, we have sent Mrs. Wintringham, and though she belongs to a different party Lady Asion rejoices in her election, for they are at one on those many social reforms, and particularly on those equality reforms for women, which cut across all party lines.

A few days before her election The Vote published a contribution from Mrs. Wintringham.

If I were M.P.

"If I were M.P. I should work for such reforms as the League of Nations and Disarmament; the health of the nation; education; housing; child welfare; and full equality between the sexes.

Peace comes first on my programme. Two of the biggest evils to-day are traceable to war—the appalling famine in Russia and the increasing army of unemployed, the latter owing to a large extent to the disorganization of foreign trade. We need greater power for the League of Nations, the best instrument at present to end war. Money is needed for education, housing and health, but in the current year we have spent three times as much on the Army, Navy and Air Force as on education. The money spent on Egypt, Mesopotamia and Palestine would sweep away most of our slums, and half the amount spent on armaments in the ten years before the war would almost exterminate the scourge of consumption.

"As an ex-member of the Grimsby Education Committee I am keenly interested in education.
