Dear Pippa,

It is a long time since I saw Pamel, but I had a real affection for her, as for all of you. She was herself in a way that very few people are & I have never known any one who gave out such a feeling of immediate & complete intellectual integrity. I remember her from the days when Lytton was up & again much later when Virginia & I stayed with her at Newham.

It is when people for whom one had real affection, but that one feels how stupid it was not to have seen them more. I always in fact mean to come & see you, but the older I get the more difficult I find it to leave the shelter of my own house & though I go up to London every week, I bolt back here as soon as I have done my work. I suppose you would it come for a week or two?

Yours
